German Ambassador's American Wife Here First Time Since War Began

COUNTESS VON BERNSTORFF

This is the first visit Countess von Bernstorff has made to America since the war began. Before her marriage the wife of the German ambassador, who arrived on the Scandinavian-American liner Frederick VIII, was Miss Luckemeyer of New York. She was in Germany at the outbreak of the European war and stayed there aiding the wounded. Count von Bernstorff, when asked if his wife had anything to say about the conditions in Germany, offered to act as intermediary between the reporters and his wife "My dear," he said, "these gentlemen would like to know that you have nothing to say." So the countess had nothing to say.

HOWLAND'S

The war does influence fashions.

Yes indeed; there is a noticeable military note in the hat fashions for Autumn.

It is not displeasing. It is not too assertive. But it is bright and smart and pleasing.

Here is a hat plainly inspired by the high Russian headgear! Here one that is reminiscent of the days of Napoleon! Here is the brilliance in color we associate with the Italian and the Bulgarian regiments; here, right alongside, is the dull softness of color that we've all read of as "that uniform which seems to melt away as its wearer climbs the hillside because it blends the very colors of Nature."

Oddly enough, black velvet is the one outstanding favorite material.

But how richly it is decorated. Here are ornaments of tinted metal! Here are unique iridescent feathers! Here are peacock feathers with their quaint curls and
